WHAT is an ideal? The definition falls most easily within the reaim of poetry: "On earth the broken arc, in heaven the perfect." Judaism of course knows no fulfilment of an ideal; the ideal is the Messianic end, and this certainly recedes as we approach it, for the essence of Messianism is that no matter how far we attain there is always a further perfection which urges us to go onward. This Messianism is the cause of certain quirks in the Jewish character. It has made the Jew the eternal protestant of history. He is at war with the stafus quo of his time.

THESE thoughts on the problem of bringing an ideal down to practical definition are much in the public mind this week with the approval of the Government of the establishment of the Institute for the Advancement of Science and Humanity. The question is being asked just what the new body which is to emerge will stand for and what its functions will be. Is it to be a kind of roof body which will replace the present Scientific Council? Will it just be the physical centre Scientific Council? Will it just be the physical centre for the housing of the various learned academies of Iszab...in—a magnificent setting worthy of what we most fondly hope these bodies are to become? Or is it to be something which transcends all these purposes? And if that is the intention, can we really set it down in a formula of cold print?

THE problem is a real one. THE problem is a real one. How shall the conclusions of science be co-ordinated for the sake of science and how can they be utilized in the service of hugan progress? Where is the synthesis of science and morality to be found? Does science as it reveals more of the heart of nature to us, also tell us something about the wholeness and oneness of the universe, the unity of human experience, the interdependence of man and man, community and community and mation and nation? If this be experience, the interdepend ence of man and man, com munity and community and nation and nation? If this be so, then why have men no drawn the proper conclusion. the proper conclusions data in an age where the dictatorship of science is, in many senses, accepted as paramount? Is it because work is the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course was a second with the course work in the course was a second with the course was a work in its own field? THESE are questions which affect the immediate future of man and perhaps contain within themselves the contain within themselves the judgment of life or death. In a fumbling, unguided manner, the present conferences on nuclear tests and control of nuclear energy are trying to answer them. But their approach is purely practical and hampered by the political factors which control them.

Interior Minister Alfredo Vitolo, said Mr. Gomez told him a plot was afoot. "I advised him to disclose the facts to the President. He did, but refused to give names, aleging he was honour bound to maintain the secret," the Minister told newsmen.

Meanwhile the oil workers union decided to postpone for four days its 48-hours strike "to permit the Government to straighten out its own affairs, union leaders said.

The strike had been called for Thursday to protest the President's oil policy contracts signed with foreign companies. Mendoza oil workers had already defied the Government by refusing to halt a strike they began 12 days ago. Federal authorities have said that the strike was part of a revolutionary plot by Peronistas.

Syrian Spy Ring In Galilee Smashed

One of the biggest espionage networks hitherto uncovered in Israel has been liquidated with the arrest of more than 10 Israel Arabs alleged to have worked for the Syrian intelligence, it was announced on Thursday, Further arrests may follow.

Details released about the activities of the spy ring, whose members worked in groups of two or three, contain all the traditional elements of a "cloak-and-dagger" mystery — agents mingling with Israel pligrims who had crossed over into the Old City of Jerusalem for the Christmas celebrations; armed Syrian couriers sneaking across the border into Israel to contact their agents; secret introductions by means of passwords; and a matchbox, of Syrian origin, dropped by a courier on this side of the frontier, which furnished police with a vital clue.

The activities of a number of the couriers were directed by Burham Bulus, head of the Israel section of the Syrian Deuxieme (Intelligence) Burton and the may try to flee the country," Judge Zohar said

Cohen was brought into the Court in a police van that drew up to a rear door At the same time Cohen's counsel, Messra. S. Sackheim, of Tel Aviv, and Y. Kushir, of Haifa; District Attorney L. Rabinowitz and his Deputy, Mr Y. Bahaloul, and Cohen's two physicians, one from Kupat Holim and the other a private doctor, arrived in Judge Zohar's Chambers. The Courthouse was crowded with uniformed and plain clothes security police while the front entrance was beleaguered by a crowd curious to catch a glimpse of the man who had been so much in the news during the last week. A special detachment of police was detailed to keep the crowd under control.

District Attorney Rabinowitz briefly stated the case for an extension of the remand "in view of the gravity of the charges against the accused."

The two defence counsel asked for his immediate release on the ground that the investigation of his alleged crime had been completed. Cohen had lived in this country for 30 years, was prominent in public affairs and had a wife and two children living near Haifa, they pointed out, adding that there was no likelihood that he would try to evade justice.

Arms Talks 60 On

WASHINGTON (Reuter).

State Department officials said on Thursday that Tunisia had not formally broken off arms talks with the U.S., and so far as Washington was concerned, the talks were still continuing.

Officials declined direct comment on President Bourguiba's announcement that Tunisia was turning to Czechoslovakia, Sweden and Yugoslavia for arms because of unacceptable Anglo'American conditions for supplying them.

But as one official put it, "As far as we are concerned the position remains that (arms) discussion continue." This official said a meeting to discuss Tunisian arms purchases from the U.S. had been held as recently as last Tuesday.

In Paris, the Government declined to comment on the Bourguiba statement, but reliable sources said the Foreign Ministry did not appear unduly concerned. They said the situation had apparently arisen from an "indiscretion" about details of negotiations in Washington.

Local, Nat'l Polls

TEL AVIV. — A proposal by the Mapai Secretariat that Municipal elections be limked to those of the Knesset was confirmed by the Mapai Central Committee on Thursday. The question was raised in this larger looy to give the minority on the Secretariat who opposed the linking an opportunity to explain its views. Their main point was that separate local and national elections would help the electorate understand the special functions of each.

Mr. Y. Almogi, M.K. expressed the view that so long as the constituency system of elections was not introduced local and national elections might as well be linked. Mr. Almogi's personal campaign for constituency elections received some encouragement earlier this week when a slender majority in the Mapai Knesset faction favcured his proposal for a private member's bill calling for a referendum on such elections.

He ALGERIAN has repeated the hope that this balloting would ensure the election of responsible personalities with whom he could discuss the future of Algeria, butting an end to a bitter four year-old struggle.

General de Gaulle tried his utmost to attain this aim. He doubled the number of Moslem deputies—44 against 22 Europeans, abolished the separated voting "colleges" for the two communities; issued stringent orders to the army to assure freedom of electioneering and sent/a commission to control these elections. But despite all his efforts it is doubtful whether he will achieve his goal. It is true 197 candidates, including 129 Moslems, have presented themselves before the glosipt of the lists. But these candidates do not persent all the political fends in Algeria; few them, particularly among the Moslems, app well-known personalities who could authoritatively discuss the future of Algeria with General de Gaulle.

I am quite certain that Mr. McCarcey is sufficiently informed regarding the natural resources of our country. Taking into account the above the fact that we practically had to start from scratch, as well as the necessity of housing 1,400,000 new-comers, integrating them into the social and economic life of the country and, last but not least, fight for our very existence against our neighbours, does Mr. McCarcey think that the amounts spent were too high?

My suggestion now is:
Could Israel — which can lay at least as much claim as Belgium to making a contribution to the brotherhood of man—not establish a kind of permanent "Expo" — though on a much smaller scale than the Brussels one, which really was far too gigantic — where all countries can present themselves at their best? This might be a source of attraction not only for Israelis, but also for visitors from abroad, even after the end of the Tenth Anniversary Year.

Perhaps during the next few weeks, whilst most "Expo" pavilions are selling out, a beginning could be made in this direction.

NATURE NOTES IS IT MURDER?

THIS writer is not sentimental, even though she is fond of animals. Faithful readers know that she advocates chloreforming superfluous kittens rather than letting them grow up halfwild and ravenous, unhappy themselves and a prey to wicked children as well as a danger to other living things. She also stood up for the zoo keepers who feed things. She also stood up for the zoo keepers who feed their snakes living mice, as they must, because the snakes refuse other food and the mice are quite unaware of their fate until the last moment. But here comes a confession: when she found that the gold hamsters she had presented to a certain too had been fed to the snakes, she felt sick and decided never to give any more.

where to save and what are the opportunities afforded them by our varied saving schemes, as well as by insurance plans and the stock market. It seems that one of the weakest links in the fight for increased savings is lack of guidance and publicity in this respect.

Israel, like many other countries at some time or other, has to overcome the great disappointment of the individual saver who has incurred severe losses through the constant devaluation of his savings due to inflation. It is not surprising, therefore, that he has become suspicious of saving schemes and potent incentives are required to restore his confidence.

The major task of the banks and saving schemes must be to restore public confidence in saving, for it seems that the terms offered are attractive enough in themselves. Without confidence, however, even the most attractive terms will not bring forth savings and the high consumption that is so harmful to the economy will continue.

IN the fields of the moshav of Avdon in Galilee, a sapper stood looking at his watch. Three minutes to go. One hundred and fifty holes had been drilled into the rocks of the stone-strewn slopes, 150 charges of dynamite placed in them. His finger was on the detonator. At noon precisely, the charges would be set off.
Once more he checked to see that all was in order. The J.N.F. work gangs scattered over the slope acurried for cover over the hill. Guards were posted 200 metres away at all the paths leading to the area.

Weitz also saw that the hill farmer was sturdier than his brother in the coastal plain; he observed that while in the plain the soil was poor and could yield nothing without irrigation, in the hills was have enough left for our girdigation, in the hills was healthy farming, not dependent on water from outside. The soil stored up the rain and held enough moisture for crops; the altitude and the cool climate helped. The terrain also helped the hill farmer, his home was a natural fortress which he could guard with a shotgun.

Early and late vines, fruit trees of all kinds, ellive. as he could. Sometimes, losing depth or coming up against a rock that was too much of a challenger, he had to retreat and make another lunge at it. If nothing helped he left it for the sapper's crews. After the slope had been ploughed in all directions, a huge ten-tined rake raked up the rocks and piled them as far away and as high as possible: to drag them another metre meant an orchard that would be that much larger.

DANGER: TYRANNY OVER THE MIND

By Aldous Huxley

THE world's population will double in 40 years, creating conditions that may be fatal to individual freedom and democracy. In a super-organized world new dehumanizing techniques of mind control are already discernible. Aldous Husley, the essayist and novelist, created such a nightmare it years up in his famous novel "Brave New World"—but he fixed it seven conturies away. Today he warns, in this first of a series of articles, that his prophecies are coming true all too fast. This provocative look at the Brave New World of 1988 is a series of extracts from a book to be published soon by Harper Brothers.

PROBABLY the best day for intelligent radio and the vision programmes in the U.S. is Sunday. This is partly due to the fact that facilities are granted on this day to religious groups to broad cast features which are carried on a non-commercial basis. Here is a report on one day's viewing and listening.

At 10 am. the Columbia Broadcasting System network presented a programme in its weekly religious feature when the consisted on this occasion of "Storm over the Dead Sea Serollis" and the successful format and it seldom has departed from this tradition of dramatic productions dealing with various facets of Jewish life and history, often with a winimiscal note. > Civil Service And Intelligence Thriller

THIS is a well-written and witty — what? It is above a thriller, it is not a spy story exactly — and it most certainly isn't a novel of character, the women being more or less pin-ups, and the men types. However, it reads well, and the background of Civil Service and Intelligence is brought out most convincingly. The solution is weak.

Slow Burner is the answer to the world's prayer — the commercial use of nuclear power without danger. England has got it first and there seems danger of the secret having been divulged, as the distinctive epsilon rays it emanates have been found coming from a private house in the suburbs of Longen don't tell me a nuclear house in the suburbs of Longon (don't tell me a nuclear institute can't be put in a private house on the sly—"Mr. Haggard" knows that as well as you and I. Of course these rays can only be some kind of red herring.) The scenes between the disagreeable and ambitious Permanent Secretary and other high-ups are clever and amusing, and some suspense is built up. On the whole, readable and unusual.

All of these are silly enough but perhaps, maybe duths one would surely slip out of bed (if not pushed out by one's nusband). While some of the hints (but which of them can one pin one's faith in, with so many errors?) seem sensible, others are absurdities. All of these are silly enough, but perhaps, maybe, harmless (I would take a chance on arthritis or gall spasms with a bath as a cure). What is absolutely dangerous, as pointed out to me by a physician, is the carbon-dioxide Beauty Bath, because it is very likely to make you look very beautiful in a coffin (if one does look beautiful as well as blue after asphyxiation). True, true, the author says that these baths don't always help and you sometimes need a why Vermeer means so much to modern painters, for one can find in him the purest abstract values; the general public may perhaps be considered to have been educated to appreciate him by the Impressionists.

WHEN the British par yv troopers began evacuat-ing Jordan, King Hussein to take a three week vacation in Europe. Both American and British diplomats tried in vain to convince the the right time for him to leave his country. However, leave his country. However, he was adamant and it was disclosed that he would fly through Saudia, Bahrein, Persia and Turkey so as to avoid crossing Abdul Nasser's air-space. Suddenly, however, it was decided that the King would fly via Syria. This was intended as a demonstration that tension in the Arab world has indeed abated and mutual confidence was slowly being restored, something Mr. Hammarskjold and his U.N. representatives in the area were much interested in proving.

The King's plane left Amman on Monday morning, flying along a pre-arranged route that had been cleared with the Syrians, but when it approached Damascus it was 'ordered to land. When it failed to comply with this it failed to comply with this order, two MIG jet fighters began chasing it well into Jordan territory.

developments with the greatest interest. First, the King's return postponed, at least temporarily, Nasser's attempt to grah Jordan — something that was widely predicted as likely to happen during the King's absence. Such an Egyptian attempt would have forced Israel to make her own quick decisions how to implement its determination not to permit the entry of foreign troops into Western Jordan.

The attack on Hussein's plane was also of great interest here in that it pointed up so dramatically the fallacy of claims that Abdul Nasser was cooperating with the U.N. in implementing the resolution adopted by the emeragency meeting of the General Assembly on Lebanon and Jordan, The attack was also expected to bring home to world public opinion the irresponsibility and the aggressive nature of Nasser's actions.

What they found will of course be told to the judge, for Cohen is to be tried under the Penal Law Amendam the Headlines in the Israel press from the much overplayed "Mapam Affair."

THE CHASING OF, KING HUSSEIN'S PLANE by Nasser's MIGs over Syria and into Jordan territory stole the headlines in Israel's press from the AHARON COHEN ESPIONAGE CHARGES alleging that the well-known Mapam Arab expert gave information to agents of a foreign power. ... Meantime ANOTHER SPY RIMG in the Syrians' pay was broken, and charges were being prepared at the State Attorney's office against Galitee villagers suspected of membership in it. THE U1A STUDY MISSION COMPLETED ITS TOUR and decided to recommend a special fund-raising campaign in America to help Israel finance the absorption of the new wave of immigrants, In Israel it was decided that the Jewish Agency will float the IL2. THE JERUSALEM POST WEEK-END EDITION

fected just over three years munism is nearing its end.

Based on a flirtation rather than a real attachment, this union, which started with the notorious Czech arms deal toward the end of 1955, is going to pieces as a result of its first real test: the struggle in Iraq between Communists and fellow-travellers, on the one hand, and the various pan-Arab elements on the other. The contest is quickly coming into the open, and the day cannot be far when Cairo and Damascus, as the self-styled centres of Arab nationalism, will start levelling charges of Communism at Kassem and his associates.

The Iraqi Communist have

ling charges of Communism at Kassem and his associates. The Iraqi Communist have a long tradition of highly effective organization despite the fact that they were relentlessly persecuted by the old regime; their strongest point lies perhaps in their ability to organize demonstrations and create slogans; and if one keeps in mind that, in Iraq mass demonstrations have always been a most effective means of making and breaking Cabinets, one can readily see why the Communists have acquired such a hold on affairs in Baghdad. The estimated 300 Communist leaders who returned to Baghdad from their various places of exile during the first weeks of the new regime went to work immediately. Judging the position too favourable for an alliance with the Nationalists — as in Egypt and Syria — these leaders seem to have decided to work on their own and come out openly against the Nasserist elements. In this they have several strong if reluctant allies:

Kassem and Aref

nationalist Istihial Party whose leaders, though Arab nationalists to a man, are not willing to surrender their navily-acquired power to a domineering Nasser of whose conduct in Syria they are not unaware.

* The Im-strong Eurdish minority, These primitive, moantain-dwelling tribes have come to look on Moscow as a faithful friend, especially since the outstanding Eurdish leader, Mulla Mustafa el-Barazani, sought refuge behind the Iron Curtain, some 13 years age. Some observers believe that the Eurds have become the most important single element in deciding Iraqi policies today — hence the Communists most effective trump card.

* Even more than the urban workers, the Iraqi Communista have directed their attention to the peasantry. Following the abolition of the special tribal courts and their laws early in the revolution, a state of near-chaes reigned among this section of the population, which constitutes two thirds of the nation. With the old authority broken overnight and some rash declarations by leaders of the revolt there were cases of labourers who refused to work on land that was not theirs, forelag the Government to promulgate a land reform law which it has little hope of implementing at anything like the required speed.

Orthodox Return

BEHIND the scenes, however, Mr. Ben-Gurion is on the war-path again. It is difficult to say just why he allowed the negotiations for the return of the Orthodox to the Government to break down at the last moment. At one time he seemed willing to let, such esteemed return of the party as the Secretary, Mr. Giora Josephst thal, persuade him that it was folly to force the religious into extremes of opposition in an election year, and that this might result in a distortion of party platforms that will remain to plague us throughout the life of the next Knesset. When it really came down to it, apparently Mr. Ben-Gurion could not make up his mind to leave the more stringent registration and personal status laws, which he had accepted, to the administrative mercies of the administrative mercies of the indicate the seems to have raised their demands one notch too high and the whole structure has come tumbling down over their ears.

Local Majorities

DEOPLE have been coming up with all kinds of curious notions in this connection. One of them is that Britain, for instance, employs the direct voting system because she has two parties, in effect, and not the other way round. First there ways a ruling party, and then an opposition grew up and outstripped it, and since then the two have been running neck and neck. The race can conveniently be settled in each area by a direct election fight between two local candidates. Israel developed out of various political and population elements and will have to fuse and merge these before two or three homogeneous parties could develop.

Israel has few districts yet that have political cohesion and could produce their own members. A suggestion has been put forward that direct elections should be tried out in the town and local councils, where local interests play a larger role. In the past there has been at tendency for parties to disregard local majorities even in these elections, where they are natural, and to swap a mayor here for a couple of extra seats there and thus falsify the picture.

scholarship for a year's study at the Hebrew University."

The scholarship is one of those awarded every year for Hebrew University students by the Ministry of Education and Culture, and Aine is now going to de what she has been longing to do for years—to study Hebrew language and literature at the source, in the only country where these have—a living quality. At the University of Heisinki, where she received her Master's degree six years ago, she had concentrated on philological studies, including oriental languages in which the main emphasis had been on Hebrew. Aino not only knows her Bible in Hebrew, but also reads as much modern Hebrew literature as she can lay her hands on in Finland, "but of course," she told me in her perfect if clipped and accented English, "that isn't enough. I want to get close to the language and I also want to study it more intensively."

At present her knowledge

At present her knowledge of Hebrew is inevitably de-rived from books, and she still has some difficulty un-derstanding what is said to her. But she has no anxiety

NOTHING seems to stump the home handyman more than trying to fix things to walls — and nothing, so his wife always claims, is easier. It can really be easy — if you know what to do. The chief trouble is the material of which walls are made. It is either too hard, in which case no nail or screw or tool can be driven into it, or also it is too soft, in which case it to mumbles away under hammer blows. Worst of all it is meually a combination of the two: soft plaster on the outside, which breaks away in large chunks as soon as you try to make a hole. It is important to know the nature of the wall, to have the appropriate tools, and to work carefully. First measure accurately for the positions of holes, mark them, and cover with a layer of scotch tape pressed down firmly. This should stop the plaster oracking, provided you subject it only to gentle blows. You can drive small nails into plaster, or larger once into soft toment blocks with sungle, but are not to be relied upon for minything heavier or fragile. upon for anything heavie or fragile.

sition has been encountered from other shipping interests. Our first serious conflict is now under way, between Zim and the Norwegian shipping lines.

By deciding to go ahead and develop a large shipping industry, Israel is in a way following the Norwegian example. Norway, with a population of only 3,500,000 has developed a merchant marine of some 11 million tons. We are only at the beginning, with our fleet at 250,000 tons and growing quickly to its goal of some 600,000 tons by 1982/83.

A two-year agreement between Zim and the Norway, expired in August. Zim now wants to link Israel and Norway with a regular service, which Norwegian shipping companies strongly oppose, giving two main arguments. First, Norwegian shipping has served Israel (and Palestine) faithfully under adverse conditions, and second farsel's intentions hit hard during a slump in world shipping, and it-would be difficult for Norwegian shippers to readjust their routes at this time. The Norwegians shippers to readjust their routes at this time. The Norwegians shipping has served its battles alone, Israel shipping is backed as a matter of policy by strong government and Norwegian shipping has to fight its battles alone, Israel shipping is backed as a matter of policy by strong government support and, they fear, preference over all other lines.

countries was rejected out right by the Norwegian companies who would consider Israel shipping carrying new trade only, and the talks broke off.

In order to illustrate the sympathy of Norwegian shippers for Israel, one may quote from an article that appeared in "the Norwegian shipping." The leading paper in the field, on October 4. After describing the growth of Israel shipping, it continues:

"There is therefore every the field in that Israel has the intestion of sinding a place as an equal, and competitor, to the fraditional shipping nations. The opening of a regular line to knorway was followed by Norway which might even be worked out in the form of an agreement that would award it a gradually growing share of the trade — say 10 per cent in the first year, 25 in the second, etc. Certainly Norwegian shipowners cannot voluntarily agree to Zim taking a major portion of the market forthwith, but Zim cannot, and should not agree to leave our trade with Norway was exclusively in the hands of Norwegian shipping interaction.

Repayment of all the loans has been satisfactory, with delays not exceeding five per cent. Economic Department has been tory, with delays n just started to implement its programme for the productive absorption of 1,000 middle class families. Such duplication is particularly deplorable since contacts with would-be immigrants have to be established abroad and the resulting projects developed gradually before the people come to Israel. As the new Government department starts work, the Agency's Economic Department is already engaged in several industrial schemes (textiles, tailoring for exports, meat canning, metal goods etc.) intended to employ some 100 families from Italy, the U.S., Britain, Canada and Turkey. A SHARP reaction in dollar-linked bonds set in in Tel Aviv a few days ago and developed into quite a substantial drop. Some of the issues lost two or three points on some offers within a few days. Particularly hit were the Housing Loan dollar-linked bonds, probably on account of the ILom issue of series "D" bonds.
